A dangerous journey

Captain James Cook was an English explorer, navigator and map-maker. He became famous as the captain of the first European ship to visit the east coast of Australia. He was also the first European to reach the Hawaiian Islands and to sail around New Zealand.

Cook was born in 1728 in the north-east of England. When he was 16, his father sent him to work in a shop. But he did not really enjoy selling things, so at the age of 18, he decided to become a sailor and began working on board local ships. He also studied navigation, map-making and astronomy which he needed to become a captain in the future. In 1755, he got an offer to be the captain of a merchant ship, but decided to join the Navy. Two years later, he passed his exams and left Trinity House, Deptford, which meant that he was now able to work as a navigator in the Royal Navy.

In 1763 and 1764, Cook sailed to North America and made the first maps of the coastline of Newfoundland, which is now part of Canada. However, Cook's most famous voyage was made between 1768 and 1771, when he sailed around the world.

His ship left England on the 26th of August, 1768, and sailed south-west across the Atlantic and round Cape Horn in South America. Then it sailed across the Pacific Ocean and reached New Zealand on the 6th of October, 1769. Cook and his crew were only the second group of Europeans to visit the country. Cook made some maps of the New Zealand coastline and then sailed west to the south-east coast of Australia. Cook and his crew were the first Europeans ever to reach Australia's eastern coastline. They landed at the place which is now called Botany Bay. Cook's sailors gave the place this name because there were so many amazing plants and flowers there. Cook and his men finally returned to England on the 12th of July, 1771, almost three years after they set off on their incredible journey.
